THE CASCADE HOUSE

SECTOR 16, PANCHKULA, INDIA

The generous vertical volume creates a sense of openness and grandeur, while the large glazing invites ample natural light to wash over the spaces throughout the day. These transparent planes frame views of the landscaped surroundings and the cascading water feature, adding both calm and drama. Together, the high ceilings and glass walls craft an airy, uplifting environment that feels both luxurious and deeply connected to nature.

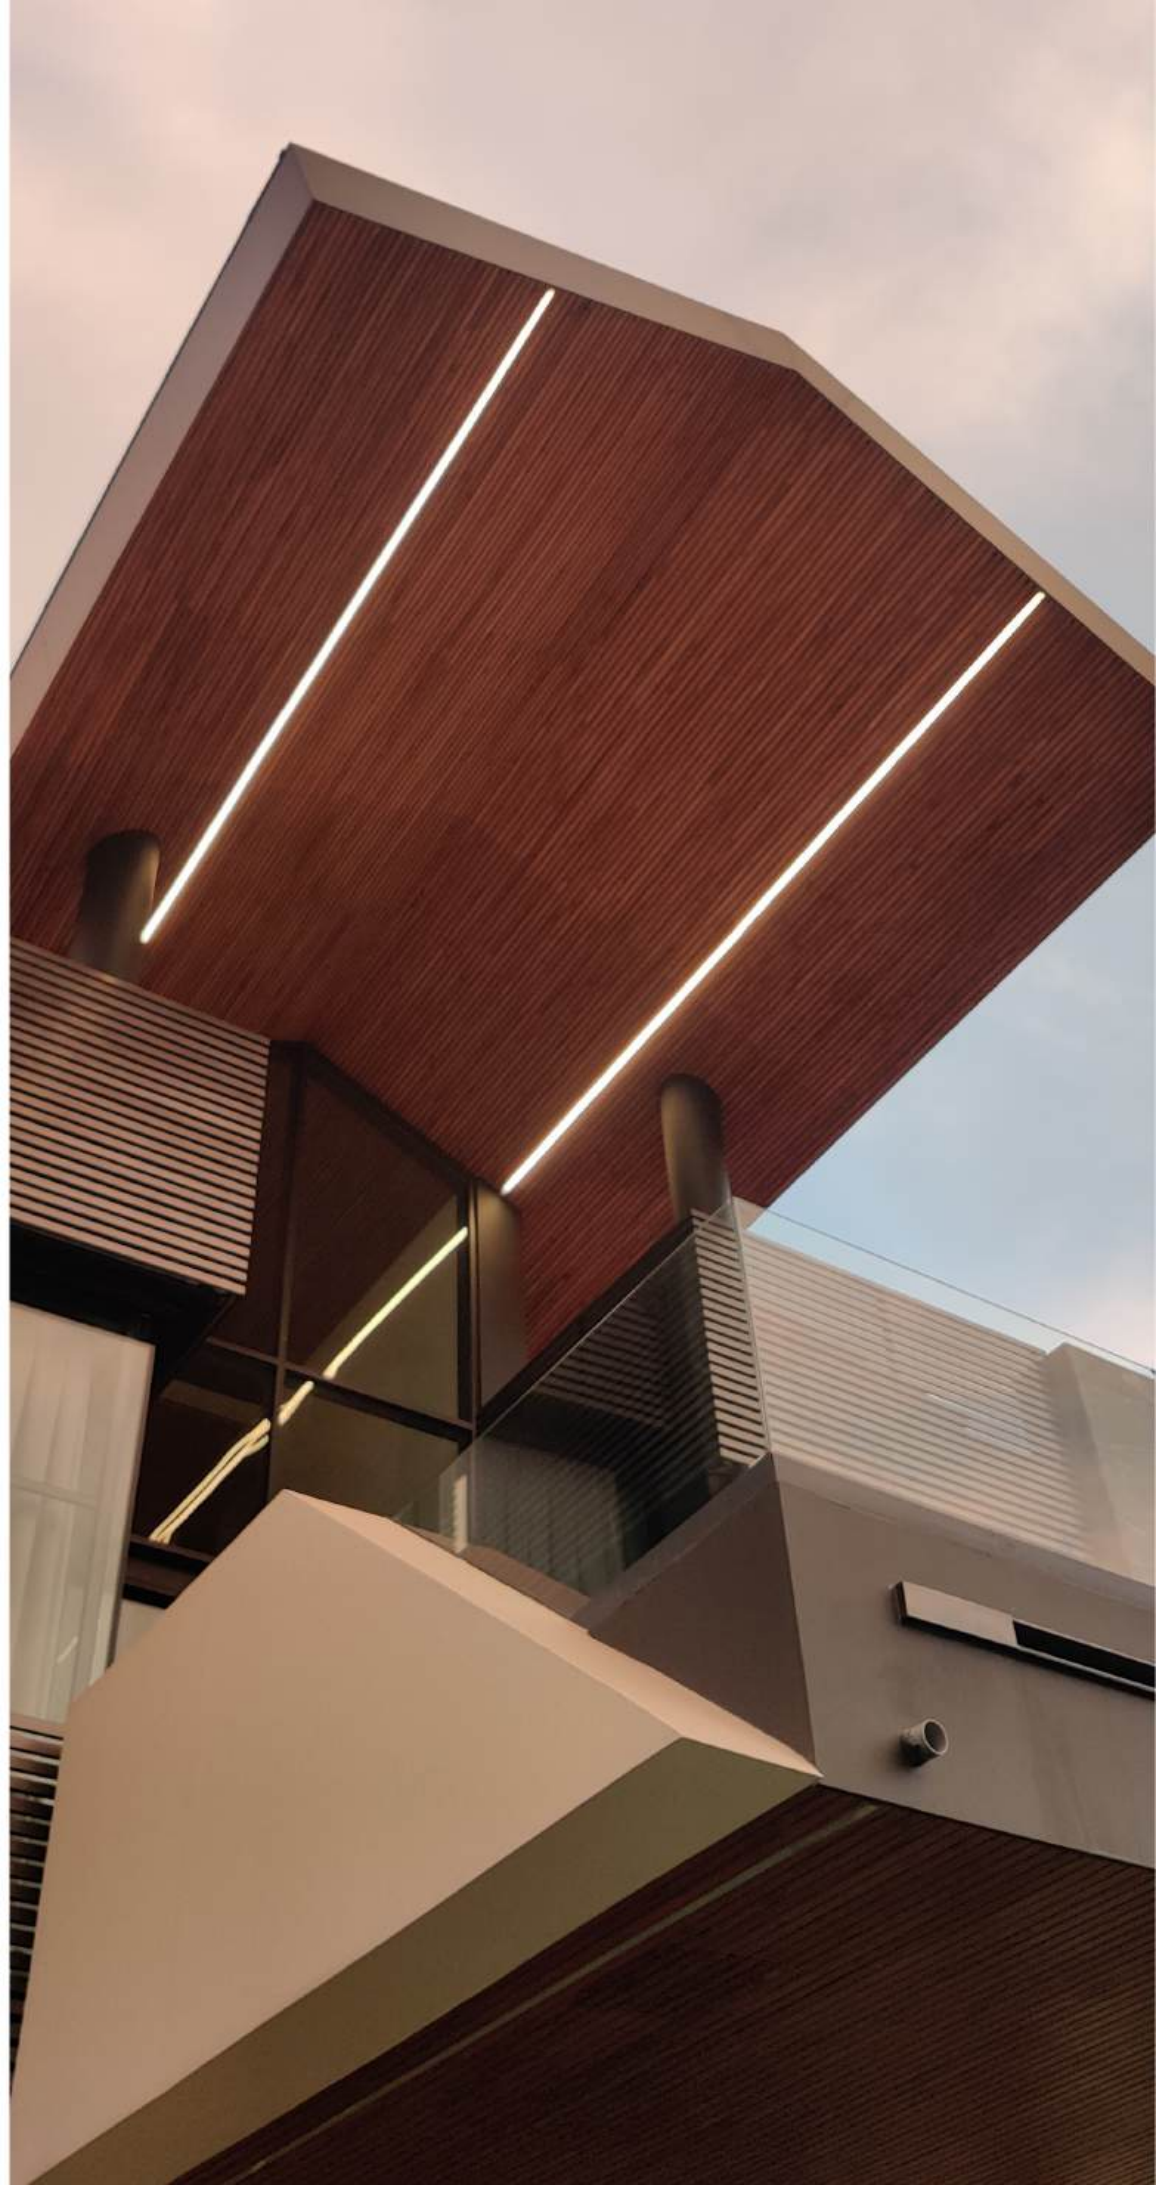

This 3,780-square-foot project stands out for its unique design, showcasing a fine balance between traditional architectural practices and modern design principle

The blend of classical practices in the form of a pitched roof and a symmetrical mirror structure cleansed of excessive ornamentation and detailing lends a clean, elegant and contemporary look to the house, serving as an excellent example of the modern classical fusion.

The distinctive feature - the one that has inspired the name of the house itself- is the soothing waterfall that greets everyone at the entrance, cascading from the first floor of the house into a pool below. Behind the massive 10-foot wooden doors lies the central foyer, providing a glimpse into the spacious interiors, visible across both horizontal and vertical axes.

Harmonizing the various elements from the calm flowing water to the warmth of natural light, the house exudes a sense of comfort and oneness with nature.

Family gatherings and visits by near and dear ones are a staple feature in Indian households.

The ground floor houses the kitchen, living, and dining rooms that are seamlessly connected to one another. The staircase spiraling gracefully from the ground floor to the upper levels, is an artwork in its own right.

The garden in the exterior , creating an airy and expansive atmosphere despite the site's spatial constraints.

Through the incorporation of marble flooring and an earthly palette, the house appears regal and majestic, reflecting the traditional Rajasthani roots of the family.

Amidst the hustle and bustle of urban life, the Cascade House stands as a true oasis of peace and serenity.

Expansive yet Embracing

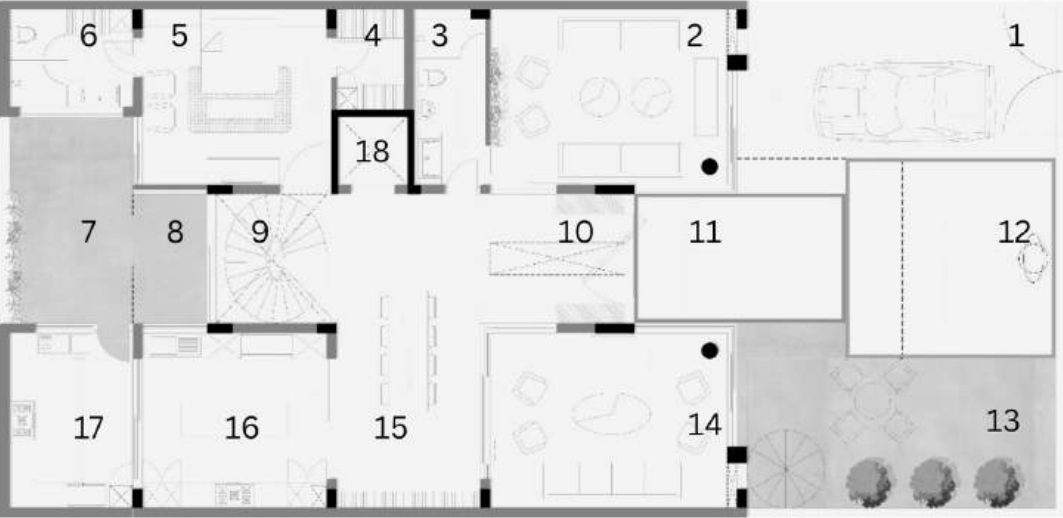

Cascade House unfolds with a striking sense of openness — double-height volumes and sweeping glass façades let light pour in from every direction. Yet within this vastness, the spaces feel warm and personal. The architecture balances scale with intimacy, allowing its occupants to feel both liberated and cocooned — a home that expands outward in form, yet draws you inward in comfort.
